LEGION'S MINSTREL SHOW SUCCESSFUL

Played to Packed Houses at Andover and Bethel—Going to Enrol Friday Night

The American Legion has again demonstrated its ability to put over one of the most difficult feats in entertainment, a minstrel show. Both at Andover on May 11, and at Bethel on May 14, the minstrels played to packed houses, and kept their audiences intensely interested from start to finish. In both places the audience showed its appreciation by generous applause, both for the fine specialties and the hilarity provoking antics and parley of the end men.

It would be necessary to travel far to find such a team as Roger Watson, interlocutor and end men, Harold Lurvey, Win Howe, Doc Wilson, Arthur Cutler, Philip Daye, and Milan Chapin. Not only did they put over their jokes in an inimitable way, but their specialties were exceptionally good. "The Doc," with his solo, "I'd Like to Find the Man Who Wrote the Stein Song," brought down the house, and he was called back again and again until he could no longer respond.

"Win" introduced an entirely new feature with his portrayal of a cannibal in grass skirts singing "Hokomoko Isle," assisted by Gordon Merrill as the ape. Mr. Chapin, as always, pleased his audience singing "Bells of St. Mary's." Another act causing much amusement was the parody by "Win" and Harold, and the audience was convulsed while Celia Gorman, as a colored mammy, did a cake walk assisted by the end men.

It would be difficult to say which of the specialties was enjoyed most. Mrs. Mona Wentzell's solo, "Isle of Capri," was especially fine, as was the solo, "When Honey Sang Her Old Time Songs," by Linton Partridge, while Ida Lee Clough very nearly stole the show with "Good Ship Lollypop" and "Tin Pan Parade." The splendid instrumental numbers included an accordion solo by Phyllis Davis, and a banjo duet by Sidney Howe and Chris Onofrio. Janet Palmer was very cute in a Yunkie Doodle tap dance, and the tap dance by Adney Gurney and the suffle dance by John King made the audience call for more.

Jane Chapin's and Arlene Watson's voices blended sweetly in "The Prize Waltz," as Mr. and Mrs. Frank Trimback waltzed gracefully. Maxine Clough, Julia Brown and Flo Merrill proved popular in a dance specialty, "I'm Going Shopping with You," in which Arthur Cutler was pinch hitter as the vocalist.

At Andover, Elizabeth Bean's solo, "Clouds," was one of the finest attractions, but due to illness she was unable to be present at Bethel.

The one act play, "Pa's New Housekeeper," which followed the minstrels, was also hugely enjoyed. Harold Marshall gave a fine portrayal of Pa Jackson, whose son James was played in an absolutely natural manner by Norris Brown. Mattie, James' sister, and Mollie, her friend, were equally well played by Iola Marshall and Marjorie Barry. As Jack, James' friend, who impersonates the housekeeper, Charles Freeman performed a only he can.

The Orchestra directed by Richard Young furnished music before the curtain and between acts. In spite of the fact that a few of the performers were unavoidably absent it was a most enjoyable entertainment and it is hoped that it will be as successful in Enrol on Friday night, May 17.

The Legion presented Mrs. Dorothy Tucker Mrs. Alma Thurston, Mrs. Mona Wentzell, and Mrs. Elsie Davis with gifts as tokens of appreciation of their assistance.

Winfield Howe has been in charge of the entire program and much credit is due both Mr. and Mrs. Howe for their untiring efforts in making the show a success.

MISS MARGARET HERRICK OF STATE HEALTH DEPT. TO SPEAK IN BETHEL

Miss Margaret C. Herrick of the Maine State Board of Health will speak in Garland Chapel on Thursday evening, May 23, at 8 o'clock.

Miss Herrick is epidemiologist and assistant to the Director of the State Bureau of Health in the Division of Communicable Diseases. She comes to Bethel at the request of the Ladies' Club of the Congregational Church and the public is invited to be present at the lecture.

The subject for the evening will be Some Points of Interest in the Work of the State Bureau of Health and Ways in which this Bureau is of Service to the Public.

NORWAY NINE HERE WEDNESDAY

Wednesday, May 22nd, the Norway High School diamond performers will invade the local campus for the first league game on the home field. This should be a top notch game as Norway has a fine team and the Gould inexperienced team has been developing rapidly. The game will start at 3:30 Daylight Time with Lurvey and Bean as umpires.

Coach Anderson will start either Lefty Keniston or Bob Browne in the box with Littlehale behind the bat. Eddy Robertson will be at first. His ability to hit gives him the edge over Bill Wight, who is an excellent fielding first baseman. At second base will be the hard hitting, reliable Lovejoy, with another fine fielder at shortstop, Charley Smith. Third base is still the question mark with Young, Wentzell, and Whitman trying hard to clinch the job. The outfield is exceptionally strong with Daniels, Quimby, Browne and Stiles.

This week the team plays at So. Paris and at Norway on Wednesday and Saturday. These two games will be a real test of the team's ability. The local nine can hardly be expected to win these two games against excellent opposition but Coach Anderson is pushing his men hard in an effort to get the most out of them. With the two opening games under their belt, the team has already won two games more than was expected when the squad first reported for practice.

In the words of Time, President Roosevelt, on his return from the Bahamas, "seemed to White House observers almost as tired, harassed and supersensitive as when he went away. Three mutually aggravating circumstances had helped to make him so. They were: 1. Congressional delay, caused by an unwieldy party majority, lax leadership and the customary rebelliousness of Congressmen at Presidential mid-term. 2. Steadily bolder hammering at his legislative program by critics. 3. Growing confusion among plain citizens as to the direction of the New Deal program, growing doubt as to whether the President himself knew where it was leading."

In an attempt to make these circumstances a little less aggravating, President Roosevelt sat down in a White House study, stared at a microphone, and made his first "fireside chat" in many months to the American people.

First part of the talk was confined entirely to generalities. The President said that the public at large was feeling much more confident that recovery was on the way—something that, in the view of most commentators, is highly debatable. He then said that Congress is making distinct progress—something that is likewise debatable.

Finally he got down to specific items. These were in the nature of an answer to a new bulletin of the National Association of Manufacturers, which said that the threat of New Deal reform measures was all that blocked the early appearance of recovery.

On the NRA, the President said that he wished it continued. He asked that the much debated utilities act be passed, said that he considered it a positive recovery measure. He pled for passage of measures whereby the Interstate Commerce Commission would be given the authority to regulate all transport, not just railroads—a bill to achieve this has passed the Senate, now pending in the House. He threw his weight behind the Banking Bill, which would give the Federal Government almost absolute control over all the nation's banks, as the utilities bill would give it absolute control over all power and light concerns, holding or operating. And in conclusion, he said, "Never since my inauguration in March, 1933, have I felt so unmistakably the atmosphere of recovery."

Response to the talk tended to be less favorable to the President than it has been in the past. Most newspapers and business men seem to favor the Transportation—Continued on Page Four—

Let The Lower Lights Be Burning

P. P. Bliss

Brightly beams our Father's mercy
From His lighthouse evermore,
But to us He gives the keeping
Of the lights along the shore.

CHORUS

Let the lower lights be burning!
Send a gleam across the wave!
Some poor fainting, struggling seaman
You may rescue, you may save.

Dark the night of sin has settled,
Loud the angry billows roar;
Eager eyes are watching, longing,
For the lights along the shore.

Trim your feeble lamp, my brother:
Some poor sailor tempest tossed,
Trying now to make the harbor,
In the darkness may be lost.

SONGS OF DELIVERANCE

Station "D S B"

Friends, I wish you might have been with us this morning, here at the station, while we were waiting to "broadcast," as we sang that campmeeting, soul-inspiring song, "Palms of Victory." How glorious it is to have the assurance that we are accepted of God!

I want to bring you a helpful message from the sixteenth chapter of the Book of Acts. It concerns Paul and Silas—two Gospel evangelists—in the beginning of the Christian era. And when I am done speaking, please open your Bibles and read the whole account. Some may read it for the first time, but whether it is familiar to you or not you will greatly profit by carefully giving it your attention. You may be discouraged at this very moment by temporal matters:—The potatoes and the flour may be nearly or quite gone, and you do not know from what source, or when, the next supply is coming for the family. The clothing may be threadbare. Someone may be pressing you to settle a debt, and your heart aches, and your temples throb. You have done your best, without a doubt, and you wonder if there is a God in Heaven to help.

Can a man or woman sing when trouble surrounds on every side? For answer, let us examine the twenty-fifth verse:—"And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them." We will carefully note right here that a true Christian will let his, or her, light shine, amid trials, anywhere. Tears may be flowing down the face, but the heart sings, "Palms of Victory."—for "Crowns of Glory I Shall Wear." It is the blessed prospect of our future home and a reunion with our departed friends and loved ones in that eternal world that supports us in our trials, and increases our faith and trust in the Mighty God.

Briefly, I will state the Scripture circumstance; and then leave this most interesting account for your meditation. These two men had been preaching and singing the message of salvation over near the town of Philippi; and Paul's sermon was so interrupted by the unmaking of a silly girl, who was a fortune teller, that he finally turned about and rebuked the evil spirit that was in her.—"And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas and drew them into the marketplace unto the rulers, and brought them to the magistrates, saying, these men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city, and teach customs which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being Romans." What "silly" old fellow the devil is! He will dodge the real issue and try to get judgment against his victim from another quarter. How that deceitful group of "ahieves" headed for the "rights of the Romans," when their own rotten "hoth-saying" business was touched! It is so easy many times to cause public sentiment against an innocent person when Satan has had one of his lies. A mob can easily be raised—without examining the merits of the case—to "beat" a fellow until he is helpless, or drag him to the nearest tree. "And the multitude (in its ignorance) rose up together against these evangelists; and the magistrates money-loving politicians) rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them. And when they had laid stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the keeper to keep them safely." What difficult (?) job it must have been to "keep safely" two exhausted, suffering men who had been whipped with cruel whips until they could not stand alone and had to be carried; and were literally being or thrown into prison! The keepers must have felt proud of a brutal work. Now we find another politician who wants to keep with his "party gang" and hold on his "fat" job. This is the man, "He having received such a wage, thrust them into the inner prison (showing no mercy), and he their feet fast in the stocks." Wish I had time to follow out this lesson with a sermon, but suffice it to say that these noble men were suffering great physical agony; but here is where the religion of Jesus Christ shows up the best. Their honest hearts are rejoicing and they speak comforting words to one another and go to singing, there, in the dark and musty atmosphere. The glory of Heaven shines in upon them in that midnight hour; down in that horrible old dungeon. As the jailer makes his hourly rounds through the halls of that old prison he hears singing and praying, and is filled with great fear and soul conviction. He never had heard anything like that before. Love conquers: the very foundations of the building are shaken with the power of Jehovah; the prison walls quiver; the bars that bolt the doors drop out; prisoners are released from their chains; but no one attempts, under the "spell of the moment," to make his escape. It would have meant the execution of the keeper.

I want to follow this to a fitting conclusion, but I have but a few more seconds to speak. Read for yourself the gracious result of such prayer and singing. It brought deliverance to more than two persons. O, friend, lift your heart to God in prayer and song; and deliverance will surely come to you!

This is the Evangelical Broadcasting Service of Oxford County. Ladies and Gentlemen, if you enjoy these broadcasts, won't you please write a word of appreciation to the speaker, D. S. Brooks of Bethel, Maine, or express yourself to that effect in the columns of the Citizen. We have tried to do you good. Pray for us. Faithfully, your announcer, "Will B. True."

Majority of States Do Not Record Their Births

Since early modern times registries of births, marriages and burials have been kept with more or less regularity by the church authorities in the chief European countries. Though generally regulated by law, such registries, until the Nineteenth century, lacked uniformity, and for statistical purposes are of restricted value.

By the middle of the Nineteenth century most of the nations of Europe had enacted legislation prescribing in detail rules for registration; for a birth, date and place, together with age, nationality and occupation of the parents. The attending physician or other person present, is required within a specified time to provide requisite information.

Failure to comply with this provision is attended with heavy penalties. In the United States general registration laws are in force in less than one-third of the states, although nearly all the large cities now keep such registry. One of the most stringent of state laws on the subject is that of Connecticut. Responsibility for making certificates is placed upon the physician or other person attending, and failure to comply with the law is punishable by a fine. Registrars knowingly making false entries may be fined or imprisoned, and any person falsely certifying to a birth, may be fined or imprisoned.

The subject of registration does not fall within the scope of federal legislation. In 1903, however, congress passed a resolution urging the necessity of uniform registration, and requesting the states to enact the necessary legislation.

Ivan the Terrible

The British museum has a rare portrait of Ivan the Terrible. He lived in the time of Elizabeth and was the first ruler of Russia to take the title of czar, a corruption of Caesar. His deeds were so infamous that for centuries after his death Russians crossed themselves at mention of his name. He proposed by letter to Queen Elizabeth for the hand of an English woman, but at the last moment the woman was afraid to go into exile in Russia. Ivan then married a Russian princess, who exercised some check on his cruelty. But after her death he gave full rein to his unbridled passion. He passed his last days surrounded by magicians, who could not, however, exorcise the ghost of his son, whom Ivan had slain.

COLUMBINE, TRILLIUMS ARE WILDFLOWERS NOT TO BE PICKED

By Mary Carpenter Kelley, Conservation Committee, Maysam Valley
Garden Club, in the Sanford Thrbune.

We find the Wild Columbine to which we referred recently on the list of not-to-be-picked flowers so when we come upon it, as we shall in a week or two, dangling its graceful red and orange bells against a gray boulder or rocky bank we must remind ourselves
once more that unless the blossom is allowed to ripen its seed there will be no Columbines next year.
And that would be a pity for ever-since the colonists came to Virginia and found it so lovely that they sent plants back to England for the gardens of Hampton Court the Wild Columbine has been one of America's favorite spring flowers.
It grows almost all over the country, from Nova Scotia to the Northwest Territory in the Rocky Mountains, and south as far as the Gulf States yet there is danger of its becoming exterminated unless the ever-increasing number of people who ride about gathering flowers
can be persuaded not to pick it.

The several Trilliums, all members of the Lily-of-the-Valley Family, are also on the list of non-pickables. Of these the Painted Trillium, or Ill-scented Wake-Robin, which in some places is known as the Red Benjamin, a title not to be found in any of the flower books although many people know it by that name and no other. And certainly there is no special need of its being on the list of flowers not to be picked as its disagreeable smell would keep most folk from taking it.

The Trilliums are an interesting lot as the rule of three seems to govern them throughout. The flower has three petals, three sep-als, two times three stamens, three styles and a three-celled ovary and grows out of a whorl of three leaves. The fruit is either a three-lobed red or black berry, or a six-angled reddish berry as in the Ill-scented Wake-Robin. The Large-flowered Wake-Robin or White Wood Lily, Trillium grand-iflorum has a black berry. This is found from Quebec to Florida and blossoms in late May or June while the Nodding Wake-Robin is sometimes found as early as April.

ECONOMIC HIGHLIGHTS —Continued from Page One—

measure, most want a modified NRA continued. But the Banking and Utilities Bills have no friends in industry or commerce. Further, it is believed that they have few real friends in Congress, outside of left-winged groups—many Congressmen will vote for them simply because they are Administration-backed, will pay them public tribute, and at the same time will hold severe private doubts as to their wisdom.

In brief, the gap between the Administration and industry is now widening. Direct criticism of the President, which was almost entirely lacking a year ago, is appearing now in many quarters.
Business spokesmen who formerly made polite objections to bills and named no names, are laying the blame at the White House door, are saying that Mr. Roosevelt is running the show and must accept the responsibility if the tent collapses.

As for the future of legislation,
there is a good chance that Congress will not be so eager to pass Presidential measures as it was in the past. The Social Security Bill, in the reasonable and moderate
form in which it passed the House, will probably go through—many business leaders endorse it. It is probable that a modified NRA will be continued with principal stress laid on hours and wages provisions, and that the Transportation Bill will be passed. But most think that the Banking and Utilities Bills will either be beaten or will be so rewritten as to make them hardly recognizable to their original sponsors.

It has often been said, during the past five or six years, that the way to solve a depression is to develop new frontiers. The only trouble with that solution in the present depression is the lack of frontiers to develop.

One frontier is still left, however —Alaska. Only a minute portion of its food is produced within its boundaries—the rest must be imported from Continental U. S. As a result, a scheme which FERA officials set upon in January, is now getting underway.

In Southern Alaska is the Matnuska Valley, with 75,000 rich acres, which now houses but 117 families. FERA plan is to transplant bankrupt farm families to the valley from U. S. farming regions put them to work producing necessities. Winter temperatures in the valley are higher than those in northern Michigan, Minnesota,
etc., so there is no climate problem. Each family will be given equipment, livestock, a house and forty acres, worth $3,000 dollars, which they can repay to the Government with 3% interest over 30 years. First families started for the valley a fortnight ago.

The plan has vast possibilities—
has enlisted the sympathy of many observers.

MAINE MEETING PLATE

Fancy Maine potatoes in attractive packages will be available to consumers in New England and New York City direct from the grower next fall with the inauguration of a grower-to-consumer service by an express company.
According to company officials,
the venture is not intended to interfere or compete with regular channels of distribution, but is merely to be an added service. The same plan, incidentally has been successfully carried out in the citrus fruit industry in Florida.

Preliminary test packages of fancy "bakers" sent to various points last week brought a most favorable reaction according to E.
E. Henry of the Railway Express Company who said that many expressed their preference to the Maine product over that of Idaho.

Announcement that the well-loved Will Rogers will vacation at Lakewood this summer recalls his airplane visit here last year to call on his daughter Mary. At that time the famous actor proclaimed his delight in Maine and expressed the wish that he could come here
this summer, a wish that will be realized in a few months.

Governors Nice of Maryland, Earle of Pennsylvania, Green of Rhode Island, Curley of Massachusetts, Bridges of New Hampshire and Cross of Connecticut and three Cabinet members — Farley, Dern, and Woodring, are expected to participate in Governor Brann's fishing party at Moosehead party at Moosehead Lake May 25, 26, and 27, according to preliminary scanning
of the list of invited celebrities.
Others are expected to accept before the zero hour.

Trooping in the wake of these statesmen will be almost a hundred newspapermen, camera men and newsworld men, from points as far distant as Washington, D. C.
This cavalcade of the so-called moulders of public opinion will be perhaps the largest that has ever visited this pine clad State and their combined efforts should result in a slew of publicity for Maine
that should be highly beneficial.

A definite challenge for a place in the winter sports sun was launched this past week when representatives from the towns of Fryeburg, Cornish, and Brownfield met and drew up plans that should result in Maine getting a just share of the winter sports business next year.

Attractions that will be offered winter sports followers in the tri-town venture will range from slides for youngsters to ski-runs and jumps for the most accomplished.
Everett Gration, Executive Secretary of the Maine Development Commission, assisted in outlining the comprehensive plans on request of those interested.

DISASTER AT MANOEUVRES

Pearl Harbor, Hawaii—Two accidents marred the manoeuvres of the vast U. S. Fleet converging upon this port under the command of Admiral Joseph M. Reeves. One of them caused the death of Lieutenant Matthias Beally Wyatt, attached to the aircraft carrier Saratoga, when his plane plunged into the sea after taking off from the mother ship. The other mishap involved a collision between the destroyers Sicard and Lea. Both vessels were badly damaged, one man being killed and four injured.

POLAND'S STRONG MAN DIES

Warsaw—Marshal Joseph Pilsudski, dictator of Poland and popular national hero, died following a long period of failing health. Although only 67 years of age, the Marshal had begun to age some months ago, appearing but seldom in public and holding few audiences even with his intimates. Immediate steps were taken by the Government to block any political coup.

BONUS VETO FORESEEN

Washington—Supporters of the Patman Bonus Bill virtually acknowledge their inability to pass the measure in the Senate over the President's indicated veto, and are now working on plans to keep the bonus issue before Congress until some compromise plan can be agreed upon. Senator Thomas, a champion of the "green-back" bonus measure, voiced his determination to keep the veterans' measure alive until a satisfactory solution is found.

FACISM THREATENS SUPPORT

New York—Columbia University
faced a new attack on alleged fa-cistic tendencies in the undergraduate body. This came from prominent graduates who had been asked to contribute to the alumni fund. Percy K. Hudson, '99 wrote,
"Until Communists shall be ousted from Columbia not a nickel will I contribute." Then he added that he had revoked all bequests to his alma mater in his will. Two other "grads" not only refused contributions but resigned from the Alumni Federation. Other letters swelled the total. To the intimation that an official memorandum had suggested that "this subject of radicalism on the campus be brought out in the open," University officials were reluctant.

HIKERS STILL MARCH

New York—Forty contestants are still in the walking march which started a fortnight ago, when 47 hikers got under way to treke from here to Danville, N. Y., 325 miles away. Living on a diet of raisins, honey, brown sugar, milk and cracked wheat, the contingent seems to thrive. One contestant took off his shoes to make the march tougher, and another bet $5,000 that he could finish the ordeal in spite of his 69 years. A woman plods along losing 2½ pounds
a day because her husband wants her to lose the 50 pounds she put on last year.

MR. MELLONS ART

Pittsburgh—Art intruded long enough in the Mellon tax case to get certain impressive figures into the record regarding the value of some of the art treasures which Andrew W. Mellon, former Secretary of the Treasury, testified he had planned to give to the nation.
The witness was Sir Joseph Duveen, one of the world's leading authorities on art. The latter testified that one of the banker's Van Eycks, for which he paid $503,000
was now worth $1,000,000. "Even I would give $750,000 for it," smiled
the dealer. Mr. Mellon paid $1,166, 000 for Raphael's "Madonna Alba."
"There are only two Raphaels in private collections in Europe," said Sir Joseph, "and the two together have not the value of Mr. Mellon's
"Madonna."

THE WORKING GIRL

New York—New York State has
just made public its survey of female workers. Investigators questioned 16,317 women employed in 2,021 hotels in 164 communities
roughly in the metropolitan area.
Annual earnings, excluding tips, of 2,730 women in 193 restaurants and 95 hotels, ranged from $34 for the lowest paid waitresses to $2,000 for some cooks. Eight percent earned less than $200 per year.

One third received less than $400;
two-thirds under $600. Most of them worked 50 to 52 weeks a year; few chambermaids earned less than $100 but none got as much as $900. Fines ate into earning; one waitress had to pay $2.50, the price of the dish she broke and the price of the food thereon. Another had to pay $2 for breaking a plain glass pitcher.

NEW-FARM MARKETS

Dearborn, Mich.—Big names
graced the conference of scientists, business men and farm leaders gathered here to discuss agriculture's future. Among them Henry Ford, Irene du Pont and Harper Sibley,
newly elected President of the U.
S. Chamber of Commerce. There was no representative of the Government. Francis P. Garvan, President of the Chemical Foundation, explained the reason: "The Government has proven many times that its theories of rehabilitation are out of date and useless. Industry, agriculture and science will solve the economic problem." For instance, R. H. McCarroll, chief chemist of the Ford Motor Co., explained that the automobile industry would provide a rich market for soy beans; the oil going into shock absorbers. Vegetable alcohol might run the nation's automobiles by 1945, stated Dr. L. M.
Christensen.

LAGGING STATE RELIEF

Washington—Pennsylvania and Illinois have 2,750,000 foodless on relief rolls. To take care of them, Harry L. Hopkins, Federal Emergency Relief Chief, suggested that Pennsylvania raise $60,000,000 for relief, offered to accept $3,000,000
a month as a starter. To Illinois
he made the same proposal, $3,000-000 a month to match a Federal hand-out of $9,000,000 per month.
The Keystone State governor locked horns with his legislature over the nature of levies to raise needed taxes. Illinois got $1,288,000 to tide the hungry over another week.
Whatever the outcome, both legislatures must act before more money is forthcoming from Washington.

MR. FISH VOLUNTEERS

Omaha—Hamilton Fish, Jr., from President Roosevelt's own New York district, is the first to throw his hat in the ring for the Republican presidential nomination in 1936. Although Ogden Mills, Col.
Frank Knox, Senator Vandenberg
and Governor Landon, of Kansas, have flirted with the idea, none
have come out flat-footedly, ready to answer the country's call, as has the arch-foe of Communism, Mr.
Fish. "If it were put to me on the basis of party, I would not listen.
If it were put to me on the basis of country, that would be another matter." So he confessed to local newsmen.

SPIES IRK THE JAPS

Tokyo—Mark A. Pierce, wealthy Los Angeles undertaker and former police commissioner, addressed the Tokyo Rotary Club. He had been in Japan twelve days, and regretted he couldn't say anything about the scenery. It was because he had been in jail. Mr. Pierce likes to take photographs; so, passing through the Inland Sea on a Japanese steamer he snapped a deck tennis game in progress. A detective on board immediately arrested him and his wife. At headquarters it was discovered that his snapshots included sailing vessels, a lighthouse and a Japanese warship.
Worse still, police found in his luggage a commission as a Kentucky Colonel—one of the famous 400—
and this sealed his fate. At the end of eleven days, the Colonel signed three long statements, paid a fine of $8.50, won his freedom. Japanese police methods, he remarked,
would make the American treatment of the late Mr. Dillinger "look like mere courtesies."

GOULD ACADEMY NOTES

Miss Margaret Hamlin, Editor-in-Chief of the Academy Herald, announces that the Commencement is expected off the press May 15. This number contains individual pictures of 46 members of the graduating class as well as two pages of snap shots of Gould school.

It is expected that this copy will contain about 12 pages more than that of 1934, yet there will be no advance in the regular price of 35 cents. Articles of school activities and literary contributions by various members of the school make this an especially worthwhile edition. Sales Manager Clement Philbrook and his assistant, Ester Wheeler, will start taking subscriptions the first of next week.

Sixteen members of the Gould team accompanied by Coach Bennett and Mr. Anderson will journey to Norway, Thursday afternoon, where they will meet Norway high school in the first meet of the season for the local school. Handicapped by the loss of a letter-man from last season's team, it is doubtful if Gould will be able to furnish much opposition to the spiked shoe artists from Norway. Gould entries in the various events will probably be as follows:

High jump, H. Thurston, C. Smith, R. Brine; Javelin, W. Wight, Stiles, W. Grover; Mile run, E. Gilbert; Half-mile, F. Macmillan, E. Brown; 100 yd. dash, D. Burris; 220 yd. dash, D. Burris; R. Burris; Quarter mile, R. Browne; Hammer throw, W. Grover; W. Wight, D. Thurston; Discus, W. Grover, W. Wight, S. Chase; Bad jump, D. Stiles, C. Smith; Pole vault, C. Philbrook, R. Brine; Shot, W. Wight, W. Grover, D. Thurston; Low hurdles, R. Moore.

The Boys' "Y" entertained the Reserves at a party in the gymnasium last Friday evening, attended by members of both organizations and Miss Ella K. Litchfield and Mr. and Mrs. P. F. Crane. A program of entertainment consisted of games and dances with prizes for the girls. Ice cream refreshments were served. The committee of the Boys' "Y" consisted of Dwight Stiles, Willard Light, Alonzo Chapman and Howard Thurston.

TRENDS FAVORABLE IN STATE BANKING

Recent Figures Indicate Large Increases in Deposits and Invested Funds

Improvement in the condition of state banks in almost every respect during 1934 is shown by statistics recently assembled, Robert M. Hanes, President Wachovia Bank and Trust Company, Winston-Salem, North Carolina, points out in an article in "Banking" published by the American Bankers Association. The figures on which this statement is based were gathered by the Committee on State Bank Research of the association from reports furnished by state bank supervisors throughout the country.

"Ever since 1921 the number of state banks has been declining," Mr. Hanes says. "Between 1931 and 1934 the decline was rapid. Figures for December 31, 1934, showed that the downward trend has not yet ended, but the decline last year was the smallest in twelve years."

There are now, he says, about ten thousand state banks, which term includes all state chartered institutions with the exception of mutual savings banks. The article continues:

"Even more significant was the ending of the decline of deposits in state banks which had been going on since the collapse of the stock market boom in 1929. In recent years for which figures are available the drop has been particularly abrupt. Total deposits in state banks declined from $20,395,762,000 on December 31, 1931, to $15,424,823,000 on December 31, 1933. The record for 1934 shows a recovery to $17,508,766,000 at the year-end."

Significance of Increased Deposits

"It is particularly gratifying to note the expansion of deposits, since it was their decline which made necessary the liquidation of investments, the calling of loans, and all the other phenomena which go under the name of 'deflation' and have brought banks so much criticism in recent years. It is now plain that this was due to efforts of the banks to place themselves in the possession of enough liquid assets to meet the growing demands of depositors for the return of a part of the money which had been placed on deposit."

"That this is true is borne out by the movement of invested funds of state banks, which has paralleled that of deposits. These invested funds (loans and discounts plus investments) for state banks, dropped from $20,291,320,000, at the end of 1931, to $14,915,773,000 at the end of 1933. By December 31, 1934, however, they had recovered to $16,769, 510,000. All of this gain is accounted for by the increase in investments during 1934, the expansion amounting to approximately $1,300,000,000.

"As for loans and discounts, they registered a slight drop again in 1934, but the rate of decline was much smaller than in previous years, which in itself is progress. Whereas the drop in loans and discounts amounted to approximately $3,300,000,000 in 1932, and to approximately $1,300,000,000 in 1933, it was less than $500,000,000 in 1934."

"In another respect the balance sheet figures for December 31, 1934, were especially impressive. Bills payable and rediscunts of the state banks, which at the end of 1932 had reached a depression high of $669,709,000, had dropped by the close of last year to the low figure of $32,101,000. One must search the records as far back as 1917 to find bills payable and rediscunts of state banks at a lower figure. Moreover, it is reasonable to expect a further reduction of such borrowings during the current year."

Changing Constantinople to the Name of Istanbul

In 1930 the new republic of Turkey began to insist that the official Turkish name be used for the city founded in 325 A. D. by Constantine the Great, and to require that mail sent to residents of the city be addressed Istanbul instead of Constantinople.

Two years after Constantine founded the city he made it the seat of the Roman empire in the East and officially named it New Rome to indicate its political position. But it was popularly called Constantinople to perpetuate the fame of its founder. After the capture of the city in 1453 by the Turks it became the capital of the Ottoman empire.

Constantinople is really a collection of towns and villages lying on both sides of the Golden Horn and along the Bosphorus. There are four general sections, however, consisting of Eyup, Istanbul (the Greek section south of the Horn on the site of old Byzantium), Galata (the chief business center and seaport on the Horn) and Scutari.

Foreigners have always called the entire city Constantinople, while the Turks called it Istanbul, a name which outsiders applied to the typically Turkish section, which is bounded on the west by the Sea of Marmora, on the east by the Golden Horn, and on the south by the ancient city walls. The name Istanbul is the Turkish form of Istanbul. It is derived from the Greek and literally means "into the city."

GOULD OPENS SEASON WITH TWO VICTORIES

GOULD 12—BRIDGTON 2

Gould Academy opened its 1935 baseball season with two victories in as many days. Last Wednesday they traveled to Bridgton to win their first league victory by walloping Bridgton 12 to 2. Lefty Keniston pitched a fine game for the winners, allowing seven hits and striking out four. The losers scored one run in each of the first two innings after which a row of seven goose eggs was chalked up against them.

Browne, Daniels, and Robertson led the attack with three hits each. Daniels hit a triple, double and single, while Browne connected for two doubles and a single. Eddie Robertson, freshman first baseman, connected for a double and two singles. The winners piled up their big lead in the fifth when they pounded Shorey out of the box with four singles and a double, which combined with an error gave Gould seven runs.

GOULD 12—MEXICO 11

Gould Academy won an exciting game on the home field over the Mexico Pintos 12-11. Gould took a substantial lead in the first two innings when they scored six times and added one more in the sixth to hold a lead of 7-4. The visitors put on a great seventh inning rally, going into the lead 8-7, scoring four runs on four hits and an error. Gould, not to be outdone, came back with a rally netting four runs too. Mexico again threatened to win when they tied the score in the ninth 11 all. The last half of the ninth Quimby opened with a beautiful double, went to third as Smith was thrown out at first and scored. Venskus muffed Bob Browne's ground ball.

Browne pitched nice ball for five innings, allowing only four hits, but he became wild after a hard hit ball struck him on the finger. Quimby relieving him was hit hard for two innings. When Gould regained the lead in the last half of the seventh Daniels went into the box. He shut the visitors out in the eighth in one, two, three order but got into a hole in the final frame when he issued a base on balls and allowed three hits and enough runs to tie the game. Quimby's run with one man out in the ninth however won the game and Daniels gets credit for the victory.

Lovejoy led the hitters with four hits including a double against the dormitory. Littlehale and Daniels connected for two hits each. Gaudette led the Pinto attack with three hits; Ferland and Buckingham getting two each.

AT SCHOOL AND AT HOME
Elizabeth L. Gould, in St. Nicholas

My teacher doesn't think I read so very special well,
She's always saying, "What was that last word?" and makes me spell
And then pronounce it after her, as slow as slow can be.
"You'd better take a little care"—that's what she says to me—
"Or else I'm really 'frail you'll find some one of these bright days You're way behind the primer class."

That's what my teacher says.
But when I'm at my grandpa's house, he hands me out a book And lets me choose the place to read; and then he'll sit and look At me and listen, just as pleased! I know it from his face!
And when I read a great long word, he'll say, "Why, little Grace, You'll have to teach our district school some one of these bright days!"
Mother, you come and hear this child.
That's what my grandpa says.

THE CHICKEN
Eleanore Talbot Smith

Three long weeks had the mother hen
Sat on her nest in the hay;
Now she turns her eggs with tender care,
For the chickens will hatch to-day.

Little chick in the egg is not very old,
Of course he's not very wise;
And he views what little life he's had
With discontented surprise.

"Surely this is not my proper sphere,
I've no more room to grow;
O, a chicken with wings and feet,
Shut up in a hard shell so.

"Of what possible use are beak and eyes
To me doubled up like a ball?
I am sure I would better not have the things
When I cannot use them at all.

"Never was any creature, I'm sure,
So sorely fettered and pressed,"
How should he know that a dozen more Lay under his mother's breast?

His murrainings end with a lusty peck
At the shell which holds him fast,
When, lo, the wondrous light breaks in
And he finds himself free at last.

Balancing on his feet and claws
And gazing above and below,
Was it for such a world as this
That I was shut up to grow?
He nestled under his mother's wing,
Thinking little enough, I ween,
That her love had hovered him all the while
With only a shell between.

And so, dear friends, when things are wrong,
And seem to go ill—not well,
Just think of the love that is brooding o'er all
And wait till you've chipped your shell.

Once in a while 'mid clouds of doubt,
Hope's fairest stars come peeping through;
Our paths lead down to the meadows fair,
Where the sweetest blossoms nod and smile,
And we lay aside our cross of care,
Once in awhile.

Once in a while within our own
We clasp the hand of a steadfast friend;
Once in awhile we hear a tone
Of love, with the heart's own voice to blend;
And the dearest of all our dreams come true
And one life's way is a golden mile,
Each thirsting flower is kissed with dew,
Once in awhile.

Once in awhile in the desert sands
We find a spot of the fairest green;
Once in awhile from where we stand
The hills of paradise may be seen;
And a perfect joy in our hearts we hold,
A joy that the world cannot de-stroy;
We trade earth's dross for the purest gold,
Once in awhile.

Pewter Holds Place in Hearts of Antiquarians

Dear to the heart of the antiquarians are pieces of old pewter. Some confine their collections to examples of early American pewter, while others search for such bits regardless of their place of origin, observes a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

For a period of a hundred years, from 1750 to 1850, the pewter makers of America reached their highest point of both artistry and production. Out of touch with the Old world, wooden trenchers were not uncommon in the colonies at the beginning of the eighteenth century. Pewter came to the front to replace the wooden vessels at about the same time that china was triumphing over pewter in Europe.

Most of the pieces first made in this country were of tableware, plates being of first importance. The earliest encroachment of china was in dinner plates, but for a quarter of a century thereafter, craftsmen continued to do very well with pewter, ware for other uses, such as for platters, bowls and salt cellars, with coffee pots, tea pots and pitchers also figuring rather importantly. But it is the old pewter plates that every collector dreams of finding.

It is not only the early American plates which are of the greatest value, Dutch, English and European plates likewise reign supreme.

Following day McNamara for Detective-Sergeants Flynn and Angellotti. As they ranged themselves, more or less at attention in front of his desk, the chief sat back in his chair and bent the pair a long, severe and rating look. They grew a lit- tle, boys, how are your private s prospering?"

"Threatening me, eh?" "Not at all. I wouldn't harm a hair of your red head—and by the way, red hair in the Irish is a sign that they breed back to the Danes and Swedes. A pure-bred Irishman would know enough to lay off a girl with powerful and implacable friends. All you were after was a hundred and twenty-five dollars—half the state reward for returning that girl—and when she sends you double that you're not sport enough to meet her half-way."

"I took an oath," Flynn mumbled. "You should have taken a phytic." "Well, I did take an emetic. Chief, I'll never forgive you those tear and stink bombs."

"Well, you shadowed my house and entered it unlawfully." "Well, I found a lipstick—" "Belonged to the nurse I had look- ing after a sick friend of mine," the chief lied glibly.

But Flynn grinned ferociously. "I found stained bandages, too." "Well, the pot can't get nowhere by calling the kettle black," McNamara decided. "Clear out!" "Give me the money and I'll lay off."

But Dan McNamara shook his head. "I know your kind, Pat. There's no sense wasting good money on you because you won't stay bought. Clear out, I tell you." So Flynn cleared out, carrying with him infinitely more respect for his chief than he had heretofore entertained. Well, some day he'd collect heavy interest on that two hundred and fifty dollars.

The last patient had left Stephen Burt's office for the day and the ever watchful Lanny had locked the office door. "Tired, Stevie?" she queried anx- iously, as he loaded his pipe. "No, of course not," he replied abruptly. "What have I done to be tired?"

"Well, you had another session with that terrible Mrs. Merton." "She doesn't weary me any more. She merely excites my sympathy. Still sleepless, of course, and still bothered about her poor devil of a husband. She's had detectives on his trail for a month. They've cost her ten dollars a day each and they haven't discovered anything to Mer- ton's discredit."

Flynn sighed deeply and went out. Fifteen minutes later he came back and said humbly: "Chief, I've changed my mind."

Alas! McNamara was Irish, too. He glanced at the clock. "You're fifteen minutes late, so I'll fine you two hundred and fifty dollars for tardiness and impudence and dis- loyalty and house-breaking."

"I'll get you for this, McNamara!" "I don't think so. My advice to you, Pat Flynn, would be to quit monkeying with TNT. I've known detective-sergeants to be taken for a ride."

"Threatening me, eh?" "Not at all. I wouldn't harm a hair of your red head—and by the way, red hair in the Irish is a sign that they breed back to the Danes and Swedes. Still sleepless, of course, and still bothered about her poor devil of a husband. She's had detectives on his trail for a month. They've cost her ten dollars a day each and they haven't discovered anything to Mer- ton's discredit."

"What a poor, beaten devil Mer- ton is! He hasn't the courage of a mouse."

"What can he do, Lanny? His wife is unbalanced, but if he swears out a warrant charging her with in- sanity she'll snap out of her lunacy. Merton couldn't get to first base on an insane warrant."

"Then why don't he divorce her on grounds of mental cruelty?"

"The man's chivalrous and pro- foundly sympathetic. Besides, he hasn't any witnesses to prove a charge of mental cruelty. And he can't run away from her, because he has a thriving business he may not abandon. I told her again to- day not to come to my office any more; that I could do nothing for her; that she was a nuisance—and to try some other doctor. She went out in a rage."

Lanny jumped up. "Now who do you suppose that is knocking? Your office hours are plainly printed on the door."

"Oh, Lanny, don't be so hard- bodded. Let the patient in."

"Who's there?" Lanny shouted an- grily.

"Oh! So it's you, is it? I knew you were there," the voice of Dan McNamara boomed.

Lanny unlocked the door and McNamara planted himself in the vis- itors' chair.

"You have news of Nance Bel- don," Stephen challenged.

"Gobs of it, Doctor."

Lanny entered with a highball. "I had a letter from Nance yesterday, Dan. She's in Paris. Can you beat that?"

"I can," McNamara replied coolly. "She's got an apartment at twenty- seven Rue St. Honore, with a cook and a maid, and a chauffeur who drives her around in a Citroen car. And she's having her picture paint- ed."

"She's written to you, then?" "Divil a line. I have my informa- tion from the prefect of police of Paris."

"Dan, you're marvelous!" "What's more, Lanny, she's liv- ing with her normal personality."

"How do you know?" "She registered as required by law, under her real name of Pen-elope Gatlin. I've known her name since the day after her escape from San Quentin."

McNamara proceeded to relate the tale he had previously related to Stephen, who had neglected to retail it to Lanny. "Well, if this isn't a h— of a tale, Dan!" she said.

"Does it beat your news, Lanny?" "Beats it by a mile, although while she was at my house she told me as much about herself as she could remember."

"This morning," McNamara con- tinued, "the president of the Secu- rity Trust company telephoned me that the girl's mother had called him up to ask if Penelope had been cashing any checks lately. The banker gathered that the mother has a notion her daughter's dead. She doesn't like the idea of having to wait seven years to have the girl declared officially dead before she can lay claim to Penelope's es- tate."

"Did you find out the name of her mother?" Stephen asked.

"Oh, yes. She's married again, you understand. Mrs. Rudolph Merton."

"She's a patient of Stevie's!" Lanny yelled. "She's such a nut the squirrels chase her."

Stephen finished writing and laid down his pen. "I told you, Lanny, that Mrs. Merton wasn't insane enough to be confined."

"Guess I've got Lanny's news beaten, after all, Stephen. This Mrs. Rudolph Merton is the girl's foster-mother."

"Hooray! Hooray! Hooray!" cried Lanny. "How do you know?"

"I wanted to investigate the girl's fortune. So yesterday I had a copy of the will and a copy of the appraisal of the estate made at the courthouse in San Jose and sent up to me. Gatlin stated in the will that he left all of his estate to his beloved adopted daughter, Penelope Gatlin. At the time of his death his estate was worth practically half a million dollars and has since doubled in value. Nance Beldon is a lost heiress."

"Not wholly lost," Stephen re- minded him. "There are times when she remembers who she is and that she has money."

"She doesn't know anything about her mother," Lanny declared. "I asked her, but she could tell me nothing. And she was Penelope Gatlin when I asked her."

"There is a reason for that," Doctor Burt's scientific mind was already racing along this new trail. "Penelope has had a wretched childhood; she knew nothing but unhappiness up to the time she re- ceived the shock that threw her mental gears out of mesh. She hated her mother with a terrible hatred. Feared her, probably. Then she made up her mind to forget her mother. And the will to forget was so strong that she succeeded."

"Not only did she forget her mother but her entire past life as well. Well, she ran away, and she'll never find her way back un- til she acquires sufficient courage to face the old issues again, sur- mount them and defeat them."

"But is that possible?" McNamara asked.

"Quite. She will have to have assistance and the sort of treatment I think I can give her, and she must have assurance that never again will she be subjected to the old un- happiness. By the way, I wonder if Penelope was a love child. Have you looked up her parentage, Dan?"

"I haven't. Can't you ask Mrs. Merton about the girl?"

"I suppose I could. But if lunacy ran in the family of her father or mother, I'm not going to bother with Penelope."

"If you decide to take her on, we'll have to get her back into this city," McNamara mourned, "and Flynn will pick her up."

"We'll fix her nose first," Lanny said.

McNamara beamed upon her. "Her criminal photographs and Bertillon measurements are gone to glory, Lanny. What did Penelope say in her letter?"

"Not a great deal. She said, among other things, that after leav- ing my house she found two hun- dred dollars. So she returned it."

"Give me that two hundred, Lanny. Stephen, our little thief is honest."

"As one personality she would remember you gave her two hun- dred dollars, but as the other she couldn't remember who gave it to her," said Lanny.

"Get over to Paris as quick as you can," McNamara commanded. "or she'll be stealing the Eiffel tower."

"Stephen can't spare me," said Lanny.

"Stephen can spare you," he de- cided.

"It's got to be," McNamara urged. "Nance fled the town with a letter of credit for ten thousand, but she'll go through that like a weasel through a rat hole. Take a bankroll with you, Lanny, and when you get there take charge of her funds."

"And have her nose done over while you're there," Stephen urged. "There's a hitch," said Lanny. "The girl evidently got a passport in New York."

"Not in New York. In San Fran- cisco," McNamara interrupted.

"Well, will a strange photograph on her passport get her back into the United States?"

"She can go to the American con- sul in Paris, and present proof that she's the same woman with a differ- ent nose," Stephen said.

"She'll do nothing of the sort," McNamara was very emphatic. "When her trail is lost it will be lost forever. Lanny, when you have that new nose built for the girl, have half a dozen new passport photo- graphs of her taken, and send them and her passport to me. The seal of the United States of America is on the passport and covers a part of the photograph. I know a man that'll make me a seal that would fool the American eagle himself. We'll fit it down over the old seal and stamp the new photograph. Then I'll send it back to you—and may God have mercy on my soul, for you can blackmail me for that the longest day I live," Dan cried.

This was too much, Lanny put her arms around him and kissed him on each cheek.

"And that's a seal that'll get by, too," Dan was embarrassed, Lanny was, too—so she took a hasty de- parture.

The two men stared after her, ad- miration in their eyes. "A d—d fine woman, that. None finer," said Mc- Namara.

"Why don't you marry her?" The suggestion popped out of Doctor Burt as suddenly as it had occurred to him.

"Now, there's an idea," McNamara mumbled dazedly. "How long have you been mulling it over?"

"Subconsciously, since you entered the office. I caught a gleam in Lanny's eyes—and when she kissed you, the subconscious crystallized into the conscious."

"I'll think it over."

"You'll not think it over, Mac. You'll make up your mind now. And I can get along without her, al- though the going will be pretty skiddy. But of course she'll marry you if you ask her. Lanny never proffers her friendships or her love on the half shell. And there's still time, my boy, still time."

"Not if she goes to Paris."

"I've heard of police chiefs secur- ing a leave of absence for six months."

"I couldn't take a six month honeymoon to Paris, lad. I've saved eight thousand dollars—"

"What? You a chief of police and only worth eight thousand dol- lars?"

"God help me, boy, I'm honest."

Stephen roared his merriment. "Why, you great jackass, I know that. I wouldn't let every man have Lanny. But don't you worry about money, Lanny is a business woman. She's managed me since I was a boy, and that includes my finances. I'm loaded up with good dividend paying stocks. You know, I could be a mighty good friend to the man who would be good to Lanny."

"I'll consider the proposition," the cautious Celt replied, "although I'd rather be a bachelor than a dis- appointed lover."

"Tell you what to do, Mac," Ste- phen advised. "Send her a nice pho- tograph of yourself. If she puts it in a silver frame you may proceed with confidence."

"How will I know, my boy?"

"If it's in a silver frame on the dressing table in her bedroom, it'll be a cinch."

"How'll I get into her bedroom, you blockhead?"

"I'll steal her latchkey and have a duplicate made. Then you can investigate."

McNamara rose and held out his hand. "It's a pity, Stephen, my boy, you aren't in my detective bureau. Good night."

The annual parade of the police force was but a week distant, and during that week Dan lived entire- ly on orange juice and spent his nights in a Turkish bath. As a re- sult he dropped eight pounds off his northern elevation. Very erect and martial he sat on a milk-white charger, while a photographer took several exposures of him and his command.

When the prints were delivered to him, he sent them all to Lanny with a note saying:

"Now that we are both in the same crooked conspiracy, I thought you might be interested in having the latest photograph of the biggest crook of them all."

The following day Stephen Burt sent him a key, and the following afternoon McNamara let himself into Lanny's house and discovered one of the photos on her dressing table—and in a gold frame! An- other print in a silver frame ap- peared in her drawing room.

"Holy Moses!" he soliloquized. "In for it now! God help me, there's no escape!"

Where Cold Weather Comes From
Cold weather comes from the north southward in the form of cold air masses, or highs, which blow out of the Arctic basin, says an authority. The most frequent path into the United States is down the basin of the McKenzie river through western Canada, across Montana and the Dakotas, and gradually turning eastward. The Northwest gets the full shock of them and consequently is normally the coldest part of the country.

Lotteries Paved Streets
Many of the early roads and streets in Philadelphia were paved with money from sanctioned lotteries. The state legislature, to prevent increase of taxes, authorized a lottery in 1791 to raise $30,000 for construction of the Philadelphia and Lancaster Turnpike, now the National highway.

The Ladies' Club is again holding one of its famous Opportunity Sales this year. The date is Tuesday, May 21st, from 10 o'clock in the morning. Clothing, furniture, books, dishes, shoes, and odds and ends that some persons are willing to donate for this purpose will be on sale and will afford opportunities for others who are looking for such articles at a very low price.

Every member of the Parish is asked to contribute to this sale. At this house-cleaning season every housekeeper will find some articles that are no longer needed and this is an opportunity for them to donate them for a useful purpose. It is too bad in times like these to destroy anything that some one else may profitably use. The Chapel will be open Monday afternoon next and Tuesday morning before the sale begins to receive contributions. Please do not overlook this.

Sunday School at 10 o'clock.
Services Sunday morning at 10:45.

"Mortals and Immortals" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon which will be read in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, May 19.

The Golden Text is: "In the way of righteousness is life; and in the pathway thereof there is no death" (Proverbs 12:28).

Among the citations from the Bible is the following: "Show me thy ways, O Lord; teach me thy paths. Lead me in thy truth, and teach me: for thou art the God of my salvation; on thee do I wait all the day" (Psalms 25: 4, 5).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "Mortals must gravitate Godward, their affections and aims grow spiritual. . . they must near the broader interpretations of being, and gain some proper sense of the infinite. . . in order that sin and mortality may be put off" (p. 265: 5-9).

Wednesday testimonial meeting at 7:30 p. m.

Poplar Tree Is Beaver's Favorite Along Streams

Beavers are as easy to raise as sheep or pigs. They are more profitable and give less trouble. The beaver flourishes wherever the poplar grows, and was once very much at home all over the continent from the Mexican border north, excepting only the deserts of the south and the sub-arctic barrens. For the natives it was an important source of food and warm clothing, and the value of its pelts was responsible for attracting the advance guard of civilization. For a century the beaver skin was the standard of value among the dwellers of the frontier.

As engineers their architectural ingenuity is sufficient to enable them to withstand their natural enemies, the bear, the wolf, the bobcat, the wolverine and the otter. But they are not nearly so intelligent as it is generally supposed. In fact they are so easily trapped as to be the most difficult animals to protect.

In their wild condition they are friendly and sociable among themselves, but regard other beavers and all other living things as enemies.

Alloys Compete With Steel

Light alloys of non-metallic resins that have a strength comparable with steel are strong competitors of metals. These substances have long been associated with pipe stems, lunch trays, bracelets, and other novelties, but now they are being made into castings for heavy manufacturing equipment with success. Used with asbestos filler, resins can be molded into pieces of almost any size. The resulting "castings" are much lighter than similar ones of iron.

THE V-8 SETS ANOTHER RECORD
May 1st brought 1935 Ford V-8 sales up to total all-year 1933 Ford sales.

THIS NEW FORD V-8

*Total 1932 Ford sales were equalled by April 1st 1935

SOMETHING has happened to the automobile world today. And that something is the 1935 Ford V-8.

It is a car that upsets accepted standards of motor car practice—by ignoring them.

With its eleven extra inches of spring-base (125 inches between the springs) it exceeds all standards for its size as to roominess and riding comfort. With the only V-8 engine short of a $2300 car, it exceeds standards of performance at its price—yet its 85 horsepower engine runs more thrifflily than ever.

It's a car that you ought to try. Not just because it is setting sales records everywhere—but because the reasons behind those sales records are so straight-to-the-point. See this car and
